Twitter similarities

It's interesting to note that some of the new Delicious features bring it closer to Twitter.

In Twitter, the @ symbol indicates an account name. Also the tag has a # symbol in front which is known as a hashtag in Twitter.

When you move your mouse over the AlphaPlus logo, the cursor brings up a Twitter button which allows you to share the bookmark on Twitter.

Delicious in the classroom

Delicious can be a great tool to share resources with colleagues and students. You can:

- each set up an account and create a network
- share resources and follow others
- set up a classroom account in which students can save their bookmarks while working on a specific project
- use it as a repository where you can point your students to access information and resources

Use Twitter features

Since Delicious connects well with Twitter, you can share your resources with your followers, colleagues and students via the Twitter account.

It's something we will be exploring shortly.

Delicious at AlphaPlus

- The AlphaPlus Web Index is set up in Delicious (over 1000 bookmarks)
- Some of our staff have their own accounts
- hard to keep up with changes (content gets reorganized and moved around, some features disappeared or look different and we often need to update our instructional resources)
- still a good tool to quickly bookmark, organize and share your online content.

OALCF resources

As we explore online resources, we look for, tag and index content related to the Ontario Adult Literacy Curriculum Framework (OALCF).

You will find OALCF tags and resources for each task group.

FEATURED TECHNOLOGY

Using Delicious to manage and share your bookmarks

Although we have covered Delicious in our Featured Technology section in the past, in the last few years it has undergone so many changes that we thought we should revisit this topic. As a teacher, Delicious can become an easy way to share resources with colleagues. You can each set up an account and create a network. You can also use Delicious with learners, setting up a classroom account in which students can save their bookmarks while working on a specific project, for example.
